Synopsis

Being the adventures of a poorly drawn, fictional cat (Bubble Bubble Meows), a string bean, and some marshmallow robots as they search for a cure to accidental meteor ingestion.

The epic adventures of a poorly drawn animated cat, Bubble Bubble Meows, as he goes on a quest to cure his friend, a string bean who has a bellyache caused by meteor consumption. Along the way, BBM and Stringbean encounter Paul, a hyper-caffeinated feline, a lollipop-licking snow pea, three robots who resemble marshmallows, and a pile of cottage cheese named Mr. Knowitall. For good measure, there's also has a subplot about the life and times of a trumpet animalcule named Nuncio, who is almost singlehandedly building a trumpet animalcule mega-city on Bubble Bubble Meow's kitchen ceiling. Surely no poorly drawn cat has ever driven a baked potato car to such a fine theme song, on such cocoo boocoo bonkers adventures! Audiences of all ages may find themselves exclaiming, "oh wowsh!" upon exiting the theater!

Matt Orefice Filmography

Seattle filmmaker Matt Orefice is the author of several vanity-press books, including a series for children (or simple adults), which follows the adventures of a fictional and poorly drawn cat named Bubble Bubble Meows.

He tried to sneak on the set of "Helas Pour Moi" but couldn't find it. He was once publicly humiliated by the late magician Doug Henning during Mr. Henning's Broadway performance. He is a big Leslie Townes Hope (also known as Packy East) fan.

The Bubble Bubble Meows movie series (there are three of them!) were made with an intended audience of one: Matt's son, Henry. Henry isn't allowed to see any of them until he turns two years old.
